SLIGACHAN

HEBRIDEAN HOTELS

Nestled at the foot of the majestic Red and Black Cuillins, Sligachan has long been a gateway to Skye's wilderness and an enduring symbol of adventure. The original inn, located at the head of Loch Sligachan, was bypassed with the completion of a road, leading to the construction of the Sligachan Hotel in the 1830s - the very spot where you sit today.

By the late 19th century, Sligachan had become a beacon for climbers, earning its reputation as the rock-climbing centre of the British Isles. Its walls have echoed with tales of legendary mountaineers and adventurers, including members of the historic Everest expeditions. One enduring story is that of Harkabir Thapa, who, in 1899, ran barefoot to the summit of Glamaig and back in an astonishing 1 hour and 45 minutes, later shattering his own record.

The Sligachan Hotel remains steeped in history, offering a window into a bygone era of exploration. It also owes much to its pristine water source - the rivers flowing from the Cuillin range, fed by Skye's abundant rainfall. This pure, peaty water not only nourishes the land but also forms the heart of the locally brewed ales and fine whiskies served here. According to folklore, the waters near Sligachan hold a magical quality: it's said that if you dip your face into the nearby Allt Dearg for seven seconds, you'll be granted eternal beauty.

From climbers to storytellers, Sligachan has welcomed all who seek the extraordinary - and continues to do so today. So, as you enjoy your breakfast this morning, surrounded by the timeless beauty of Skye, remember - anything is possible.
